Literally and playfully Post-modern, Shinn deconstructs the 19th century Modern (Didone) style to question the conventions of stress inherited from earlier, calligraphically-informed types, governing the acceptability of which stems are thick, which are thin. With the Didone vocabulary artfully rephrased, a novel typographic color of corroded notan emerges.
Literally and playfully Post-modern, Shinn deconstructs the 19th century Modern (Didone) style to question the conventions of stress inherited from earlier, calligraphically-informed types, governing the acceptability of which stems are thick, which thin. With the Didone vocabulary artfully rephrased, a novel typographic colour of corroded notan emerges. Literally and playfully Post-modern, Shinn deconstructs the 19th century Modern (Didone) style to question the conventions of stress inherited from earlier, calligraphically-informed types, governing the acceptability of which stems are thick, which thin. With the Didone vocabulary artfully rephrased, a novel typographic colour of corroded notan emerges. Literally and playfully Post-modern, Shinn deconstructs the 19th century Modern (Didone) style to question the conventions of stress inherited from earlier, calligraphically-informed types, governing the acceptability of which stems are thick, which thin. With the Didone vocabulary artfully rephrased, a novel typographic colour of corroded notan emerges. Literally and playfully Post-modern, Shinn deconstructs the 19th century Modern (Didone) style to question the conventions of stress inherited from earlier, calligraphically-informed types, governing the acceptability of which stems are thick, which thin. With the Didone vocabulary artfully rephrased, a novel typographic colour of corroded notan emerges. Literally and playfully Post-modern, Shinn deconstructs the 19th century Modern (Didone) style to question the conventions of stress inherited from earlier, calligraphically-informed types, governing the acceptability of which stems are thick, which thin. With the Didone vocabulary artfully rephrased, a novel typographic colour of corroded notan emerges. Literally and playfully Post-modern, Shinn deconstructs the 19th century Modern (Didone) style to question the conventions of stress inherited from earlier, calligraphically-informed types, governing the acceptability of which stems are thick, which thin.
THE HISTORY OF THE TOWN is reflected in its monuments

Die Geschichte der Stadt versinnbildlicht sich in ihren Denkmälern

L’histoire de la ville est symbolisée dans les monuments